ABOUT

Master Gardeners are trained volunteers who help increase the outreach efforts of Cooperative Extension. Cooperative Extension was enacted by Congress in 1914, to provide the public with education, information, and practical application of new research through the Land Grant Universities. Cape Cod Cooperative Extension conducts programs in cooperation with the University of Massachusetts (Amherst), U.S. Department of Agriculture and is supported by county, federal, and state funds.

Master Gardeners first appeared in 1972, when a Washington state County Extension Agent trained a group of volunteers to help meet the public's demand for horticulture information. The program spread quickly to the fifty surrounding states and Canadian provinces. In Massachusetts, the Master Gardener program was run by UMass Cooperative Extension until 1989. In 1993, the Master Gardener Association of Cape Cod was established to assist Cape Cod Cooperative Extension's outreach of unbiased horticulture information to Barnstable County citizens.

TRAINING

Anyone who is knowledgeable or experienced in gardening, enthusiastic, interested in helping people, and able to communicate effectively can become a Master Gardener. Applications typically become available in late spring and are due by the end of summer. If you are interested look for more information on applying at www.capecodextension.org.

The Master Gardener program's success relies on the dedication of its volunteers and requires a significant effort to complete the training and volunteer commitment. Training begins in January and is one full day a week for 10-12 weeks. Following the training, volunteers must meet the 60 hour volunteer obligation. After the initial year a minimum of 20 hours volunteering and 5 hours of continuing education is required to stay active.
